THE IDEA.

"She knows me? You know me, madam?" said Selig, astonished.

"Yes, sir, and what is more, I love you—but don't be scared—like a mother loves her son, and when the most extraordinary circumstance threw in my way that amiable child here and I learnt your connection, I determined, at once, to see you!"

"Yes," interrupted Catharina. "If you behold me now, it is mainly to the powerful, beautiful, independent of that noble and truly grand benefactor that we are indebted for it."

"Is it possible? Allow me, then, to ask your name, madam—your blessed name—that I may inscribe it on my heart in everlasting characters."

"I am Madame de Stael," said she simply. "The daughter of the illustrious Necker" exclaimed Selig, in rising involuntarily.

"Yes, sir."

The two young men bowed their heads with reverence, tears rolling down their cheeks; and the greatest female author of France felt prouder at this silent homage of two enthusiastic German students, than she had ever before in the most brilliant saloons of Paris.

At that moment the report of a pistol shook the windows of the coach; a bullet struck one of the horses and brought the others to a stand still. The General uttered a tremendous oath, and ordered his follower to dismount, pointing to a bush, in a ravine close to the road, half concealed by the smoke resting yet on it. "Be not afraid, ladies," said he with perfect coolness; "it is nothing but a highway robber, an assassin. My Pierre will soon give a good account of him, and cocking his own pistol, he turned his horse towards the bush.

The assassin, meanwhile, finding himself covered and pursued, was suddenly seen issuing from his ambush and flying at a furious rate, on horseback, in an opposite direction.

"This was no other than Capucene, frantic at the chastisement inflicted by Rapp, and intent on this base revenge. But the angel of death hovered over him, and struck him with blindness! In the frenzy of his fright, he mistook the road, and rushed headlong on a track of quicksands, abounding in this parts. All of a sudden, horse and rider became invisible, engulfed in the treacherous pool of a horrible quicksand."

"That is God's finger!" said Madame de Stael, solemnly.

A PEACE CONFERENCE.

After the memorable battle of Wagram, the fortune of Napoleon seemed at its zenith, casting in the shade the greatest heroes of antiquity. Such was the rapid succession of his victories, that the multitudes began to look upon him as a supernatural being, capable of overturning thrones and empires, kings and potentates, by the mere power of his will. We have not the pretension, however, to write the history of that time. If we recall those portentous events; if we depict some of those epic figures, it is not out of an overbearing self-conceit, but because they are closely connected with the facts and personages of our narrative.

The reader, consequently, will follow us again to Schoenbrunn—to the very close of the great man. Whoever have seen him then, in his plain, unassuming dress, perspiring, with a careworn look and a listless eye, could have hardly recognized the victor of a hundred battles, the impetuous warrior who, like a meteor, carried terror and defeat in the ranks of his enemies, and far less the versatile Genius, who could receive the Cote Napoleon and sign on the battle field an engagement for the Theatre francais.

At that moment he was moody and melancholy, because all the splendor and brilliancy of his destiny was dimmed by a domestic heart-burning. Man is always man, however high, however dazzling his career. He pondered on a long-matured plan; on his divorce with the highly-gifted and devoted Josephine. In vain did policy, state necessity, dynamic exigencies, advise that harsh measure—his heart revolted against its cruelty. A secret voice admonished him to forbear; but in virtue of the extreme mobility of his character, he soon shook off as it were the last grasp of his conscience, and said, as if his unfortunate spouse had been present: "Josephine, Providence has decreed our separation, and thus it shall be!"

He rang suddenly the bell. Marchand, his private valet de chambre, almost immediately appeared at the door.

"Is Santini in the ante-room?"

"Yes, Sir."

"Tell him to come."

That officer entered speedily.

"Is the conference in session?"

"Yes, Sir."

"Are they all present?"

"With the exception of Prince Eugene, they are all present; but he will come."

"Do the negotiations progress?"

"I am totally ignorant of it, Sir."

"Come, come, Santini. You know more than you will give yourself credit for. You have been listening at the door, as usual."

"I, Sir?"

"Certainly; but never mind, since I want you to know something about their doings."

"That's different. Well, then, Sir, they progress very slowly, if they progress at all."

"Instead of discussing the grave matters before them, they indulge in all sorts of meriments and jokes."

"Aha!" said the master, in knitting his brows with one of those olympian frowns, which often made the courtiers quake at the Tuileries. "I shall make them laugh on the wrong side of their face! It is well, Santini."

The officer of ordinance withdrew. Napoleon pressing a spring in one of the panels of his room, entered a secret passage, leading to a hiding place, contiguous to the council-chamber, from whence he could see and hear everything.

The room or rather hall in which the diplomatists were assembled, was no other than the ancient council chamber of Francis II, gorgeously painted and decorated and chiefly conspicuous by the large, full length portraits of the most prominent personages of the house of Hapsburgh. In the centre stood the classical table covered with green cloth, and around it seven gilded chairs, one of which was vacant.

There were present on the Austrian side, the Prince of Lichtenstein; Count Bubna and the young Metternich; France was represented by Prince Eugene; Berthier, Prince of Neuchatel and Champagny, ambassador at the court of Vienna.

Champagny as the President, pro tem, of the conference, was then just urging his colleagues to proceed more diligently; "for," said he, "the ultimatum of my master and sovereign is couched in clear peremptory terms and there can be no equivocations with a sine qua non. All those dilatory counter-propositions, Gentlemen, may evince your diplomatic skill and dexterity, but that cannot lead to favorable result."

Remember that all Europe looks upon us as the arbiters of its destinies; that the repose of the world depends on our decision; further delays would be criminal indeed. In the memorandum before you, are laid down the chief points of the treaty to be concluded. I have had the honor to comment upon them at length, whilst, assembled at Altenburg; but could obtain nothing from you, gentlemen, but evasive, ambiguous and enigmatical replies, a circumstance which has induced my master to transfer the conference to Schoenbrunn. It is evident then that all the questions relating to that treaty, or at least the preliminaries serving as a basis to that treaty, must now be speedily settled if you will not incur a heavy responsibility. With your permission, and leaving aside all accessory objections, I will read the preamble of a final draft, edited by his Majesty himself. Art. I, paragraph 1. The statu quo or uti possidetis, is maintained until the final settlement of the interests in litigation."

The orator held in, interrupted by the simultaneous signs of disapprobation of the three German negotiators.

"I must make my reserves at once," said Bubna. "Whatever may be our private views relative to the tenor of this first article, as representatives of our Government, we cannot listen to such overtures without protestation."

If these are the concessions promised by his Majesty the Emperor, we confess our inability to act in conformity with them, and we must, under the circumstances, refer to our cabinet for new instructions."

"But," retorted Champagny, "those propositions have been laid before you at Altenburg and did not meet then with that fierce opposition."

"Very possible," rejoined Metternich, dryly; "but things have assumed since a different aspect. Wait till our instructions, now on their way, shall have reached us. In pressing too much so important a measure, outsiders may infer that some secret motive has prompted its execution.—Please do not interrupt me, and let us not allow ourselves to be carried away by unnecessary excitement. We discuss, for the present, about nothing, since our instructions are not arrived."

"Then the question arises, why are we here assembled?" exclaimed Champagny impatiently, in throwing the manuscript on the table.

"We are here assembled for the despatch of business to be sure," resumed Metternich, with comic gravity; "but it is not exactly stated, that in the absence of positive adhesions from our Government, we may not transact that business in a way conducive to the perfect entente cordiale which ought to prevail between negotiators, in discussing matters not entirely connected with our present deliberations."

"This is no time for jesting, Sir."

"Neither do I; but you will allow me to affirm that music, for instance, has always been considered as the most soothing topic between contending parties; and since, in the eyes of the world, we must discuss, let us discuss at least about something agreeable. What do you say, gentlemen, of the new vocalist—the brilliant star that has arisen on the musical horizon?"

"You mean the divine Catalani," said the Prince of Lichtenstein, catching the hint of his saturnine young compeer.

"Aye, what is your opinion about the nature of her voice?"

"Why, I hold her for a Soprano of the first water."

"And I say she is a mezzo-soprano, or rather a contralto," chimed in Bubna.

"She is all that, in my estimation," rejoined Metternich; "for if she did not possess all those registers, she could not perform those wondrous every day by enthusiastic crowds."

In a word, she is an exception."

"Oho! That's saying too much. Exception implies without equal. Now it happens that I heard, not later than yesterday evening, a singer, whose organ, method and power are far superior to those of the celebrated contralto."

I chanced to be invited at a soiree, given in honor of young Pfeiffer, by some of his friends, to celebrate his return from France, and nothing can give an idea of the sensation, the furor the delirium created by a young Tyrolean female of matchless beauty, and possessed of a voice without parallel. The brilliant assemblage which thronged the saloon, seemed spell-bound by the extraordinary spectacle presented there. Figure to yourself the two finest creatures perhaps in the world—the famous Jewess Sarah, walking, arm in arm, amidst admiring, entranced crowds, the living types of human perfection: it was a sight not easily to be forgotten."

"But who is that prodigy?" interrupted Metternich.

"Nobody knows exactly. The well-informed however, pretend that she is the adopted daughter of the brave Andreas Hofer, spreading her nets around the richest heir of Vienna, the visionary Pfeiffer. Be this as it may, one thing is certain; with her attractions, she will carry everything before her," added the old singer, smiling, and highly elated with his own witicism.

Suddenly, Planat, the officer of Ordinance, acting on this occasion as Master of Ceremonies entered and said: "Gentlemen, the Emperor is coming;" and almost immediately Santini, the head usher, opened the two folding doors, and announced, in a loud voice, "The Emperor!"

All rose and remained standing, while Napoleon went straight to the presidential chair. "Gentlemen, be seated," said he after a solemn pause, "the regards which one Sovereign owes to the other, forbids me to qualify the strange conduct of his representatives. I would only say this, that his Majesty the Emperor Francis seems to labor still under the old delusions, in mistaking forbearance and magnanimity for weakness. He cannot renounce the idea of being, as of old, the most powerful monarch of Europe, and this in the face of repeated defeats. Hence that dilatory, fallacious tactic, those shifting expedients to ward off final conclusions, in hopes that something unexpected miraculous may turn up. But, Sirs, in spite of your ill-concealed exultation at the untoward battle of Talavera—in spite of the English descending in Holland, Napoleon will show to the world, that he dictates, but does not receive treaties. But, in vindicating the rights of war and of conquest, the Emperor of the French does not overstep the limits he has laid down himself. For," added he in a softer tone, "what do I ask of Austria? You know I could reduce her power in warring from her Hungary and Bohemia. But I have a higher aim; I wish to bring about the fusion of the great European interests. My ambition is to become the arbiter of nations and kings. These are the true sentiments which breathe in every line, every word of the treaty under discussion. If your Master is really desirous of peace, why not bring matters to a speedy conclusion?"

Gentlemen, I can hear objections, representations, but no tergiversations, no frivolous pretences. You want new instructions, you say; well, get them then; but mark this: if, 48 hours after their reception, the treaty is not concluded, I shall give immediate orders for the resumption of hostilities; and now, gentlemen, adieu. The conference is closed for the present."

Planat opened the folding doors, and the plenipotentiaries made their exit rather crestfallen. Metternich, alone, preserve his equanimity, whispering in the ear of Bubna as they descended the great staircase, "Rira bien qui rira le dernier."

"Berthier, and you, Eugene, remain," resumed the Emperor, thoughtfully. "I wish to speak to you on a most important, all-absorbing topic. You have been astonished at my longanimity with those stubborn, stiff-necked Teutons, and I admit that their duplicity deserved a more acerbic treatment; but I have reasons of the highest import for not pushing matters to extremes. The time is arrived, my son, added he, with that caressing look and winning intonation of voice, he knew so well to assume whenever required. "My son, the time is arrived when your devotedness to my person will be put to a severe test. The stability and duration of the Empire I have founded requires, as I often told thee, a legitimate heir to the throne; requires, imperiously, I say, another consort. I have selected thee for the delicate, difficult mission of apprising my gifted and affectionate Josephine of this sad resolution; for thou alone canst comprehend the terrible state-necessity, which prompts me to this act—thou alone canst soothe the immense grief of her, whom thou callest thy mother. Thy noble lofty soul, already prepared for this great sacrifice, will be more apt to instill the same sentiments in that of the Empress."

Napoleon stopped short on beholding the deadly palor that overspread the noble countenance of Prince Eugene, and a tear trembled on his own eyelid, as he exclaimed: Vice-King of Italy! should I have been misled by my high opinions of your character?"

"Sire," answered the Prince, with solemn gravity, "your Majesty will always find in me a dutiful son and a devoted servant. Neither shall my illustrious mother be found unequal to the task. The Empress is aware that the stability and duration of your reign require a direct heir to the throne. She knows also that she owes her present elevation solely to the affection of her august Sovereign, and is, consequently, ready to descend from it as soon as she becomes an obstacle to the greatness, prosperity and power of that dynasty, founded by your glorious hands—a dynasty evidently sustained by Providence, to close up the abyss of revolution, and re-establish the reign of order and true liberty. It is not, therefore, the contemplated act of divorce, long foreseen by my mother; it is not the downfall of all our hopes and high aspirations which I regret and bewail but the questionable policy which dictated the choice of the princess, destined to replace Josephine Beaubarnais!"

"I will not recall the fatality attending matrimonial alliances of French Sovereigns with Austrian Princesses. They are facts recorded by history. It is true, those facts may have tempted the mighty genius, accustomed to challenge obstacles. He may have looked upon them with the disdain of the conqueror, who, conscious to have reduced that once mighty empire to a third rate power, now condescends to extend towards it a protecting hand. But O Sire! remember that Austria always has been the irreconcilable enemy of your person and dynasty, and, though weakened by reverses, is yet formidable. The high soaring eagle may be reached by the treacherous bullet of a child. It is madness—your Majesty will pardon my harshness in favor of my motives."

It is madness to look for such an alliance in such a quarter. The eventuality of a refusal is dreadful to contemplate, and still more so an acceptance. The Biblical allegory of Samson and Dalilah may be repeated. Believe me, Sire, if the proud, overbearing Francis consents to accept the great "soldier of fortune" as his son-in-law, it is because he has a sinister end in view, and true disciple of Loyola, will give away his daughter, with secret restrictions and mental reservations. Let me beseech you, Sire—let me entreat you—to forego this fatal project. Why look for a spouse among the haughty scions of Royalty at all? Why not spurn secular prejudices, and cast your choice upon some high-minded French Plebeian damsel? It belongs to the greatest innovator of modern times to despise such superannuated notions and to teach the world that merit alone is worthy to reign and to occupy a throne."

"Well spoken, my son," replied the Emperor, with an affectionate smile. "But you forget one thing, and that is: that this project is the result and part of a long matured plan of general policy and European pacification. Your powerful arguments have not been overlooked whilst reflecting on them, and yet my resolution is irrevocable. Futurity will tell that this alliance was a necessity of the times, and that Napoleon only obeyed its imperious voice. All opposition to it becomes, consequently, chimerical. I say more: I am already too far advanced to recede. You seem surprised. Know, then, my friends, that, in spite of the present warlike attitude of my future father-in-law, the consent of his daughter is already secured!..... The negotiations have been carried on so secretly and so skillfully that success could not fail. You need not fret thus on your seat, Champagny. It is not in your capacity of Ambassador, but in perhaps a right to expect that mission; it is not you have been superseded by another, it is not out of any distrust in your diplomatic talents; but because chance has thrown in my way a brave negotiator, more qualified for her sex and all-powerful influence over the mind of the Princess. In one word, my secret agent is no other than the Jewess Sarah. That remarkable person, who joins to the most prepossessing appearance a lofty intellect, has, since her first presentation at court, some years back, exercised a singular power over the whole Imperial family, and especially on Marie-Louise, who, it is whispered, places such implicit confidence in her, that she consults her on everything. In fine, she is a regular favorite, but not in the equivocal acceptance we in French attach to that word."

"Now, it happens that this noble and truly aristocratic creature, is the sister of that gloomy visionary, called Pfeiffer, whom I have just rescued from certain death. You understand now my forbearance with regard to that fanatic, and the apparent oddity of my selection of his sister as my matrimonial agent. By my clemency, I secure the good will of that influential confidant of the Princess, and neutralize the irascible hostility of Germany's fiery youths, who consider that Pfeiffer as the personification of true patriotism, and whose death, as a martyr in the cause, would have fanned a flame difficult to quench. Do you not think to Berthier?"

"May it please your Majesty," said the Prince of Neuchatel. "I do not exactly think so. I have heard it whispered, from good authority, that the magnanimity and generosity displayed by your Majesty, on that occasion, has not been duly appreciated by the parties mostly interested."

"And who told you so?"

"General Rapp himself."

"Apropos! that reminds me that I have not received, as yet, a full report of his journey to France." And shaking abruptly the bell, placed at his side, Santini appeared.

"Is General Rapp among the officers on guard at the palace?"

"Yes, Sir."

"Let him be instantly admitted."

"To the council-chamber?" said the officer, astonished at this breach of etiquette.

"To the council-chamber."

"Rapp," said the Emperor, as soon as that personage entered, "you have given me but a scanty report of your doings in France."

"Your Majesty dismissed me after a short interview, else —"

"It is true. I for wish some more particulars about the two ex-conspirators. How did they receive the announcement of their pardon? Did they feel gratified?"

"So far from manifesting any sentiment of the kind, their sullen air seemed to say: 'You do only your duty, we owe you nothing.'"

"The fact is, they had been guilty of no act, coming within the pale of the law, and no tribunal can condemn mere intentions without any commencement of execution."

"With such an elastic jurisprudence, conspirators may go far," said the blunt soldier, but, correcting himself immediately, "I crave your Majesty's pardon; but it is my settled opinion that men of their stamp are not deterred from their unchristian path by clemency. They consider themselves as soldiers in a holy cause. They may be defeated by force; but persuaded, never! They ought to have been kept in durance vile and rendered powerless."

"And are they not still powerless?" exclaimed Napoleon, with an expression of ineffable disdain. "Are they less my prisoners, because they are in Austria? Verily, I have taken their power from them in setting them at liberty."

"I wish with all my heart your Majesty may be right and I wrong. But I have sad misgivings about their future movements. From some conversations, I overheard during our journey to Switzerland, I am led to believe, that their captivity has exalted their animosity to frenzy."

THE CONDITION OF THE JEWS IN ROUMANIA.

The Roumanian Post contains the following horrifying intelligence:

In the evening of the 5 of August, attempts were made to provoke outrages against the Jew in the vicinity of the Great Synagogue at Bucharest, which quarter is densely populated by Jews. A Christian boy made there, exhibiting his bloody hands, and asserting that he had been enticed into the cellar of the synagogue, where some Jews attempted to draw blood out of him. He added that he had succeeded with the greatest difficulty in escaping through a window, and which occasion he had lacerated his hands. The mob soon gathered, and, as a matter of course, there was no lack of insults of every kind, which might have led to a regular carnage, if the prefect of police, Mr. Biot, had not arrived on the spot in time, and nipped all riotous attempts in the bud. The prefect of police was immediately followed by a detachment of the military, mounted gendarmes and officials of the police, who swept the streets clean and occupied them.

It has subsequently appeared that the cellar of the synagogue, in which the onslaught on the Christian boy was said to have taken place, has been leased for many years past to a Greek dealer in fruit, who exclusively possesses the key of the cellar. It is quite probable that this incident was not mere fortuitous, but has a deeper significance. It was, perhaps, intended to commence with the Jews, and, in case the dimensions of the riots could be successfully enlarged, to execute a coup d'etat against the Government. Thanks to the energetic measures, taken without delay by the Government, and the circumspection of the prefect of police, Mr. Biot, who was the first to appear on the theatre of the disturbance, the malicious intentions of the rioters were foiled. That the mob on this occasion committed excesses against a number of Jews, and even against such as were erroneously taken to be Jews and, that some were beaten and wounded, was unavoidable. Numerous arrests have been made, and we hope that the guilty will not escape their punishment.

COMMENTS OF THE ROUMANIAN PRESS.

The Trompette Carpatol writes in its usual cynical style:

It is rumored that a Jew, in accordance with an ancient inhuman custom, has recently endeavored to obtain Christian blood, for which purpose he has looked up a Greek boy in the cellar of the Synagogue. In journalism, in commerce, in industry, in religion, everywhere the Jews are scoundrels and traitors. The crime was, fortunately, discovered in time, and the dealers in vegetable and the butchers who were at that moment on the market place, have not omitted to give a well deserved lesson to the Jews. (Some peaceable Jews, who happened to pass by, were thrown on the ground and beaten, while others were insulted.) The police has done well to interfere, so as to prevent fatal consequences; but our Government would act far better still, in taking severe measures against the commercial, industrial and press Jews, lest the people should one day seek the right themselves.

The new organ Porporul (the People) after relating the above occurrences in its own manner, offers the following comment thereon:

The Jews always believe that the Christians are their mortal enemies and those of God, and that they can obtain the dominion of heaven through Christian blood. The Jews are compelled by their laws to remain true to their antiquated ideas, which modern society has long since declared to be pernicious. The Jews are always capable of perpetrating the crime of which they are accused; there is no progress among them. If there were, they would no longer be Jews, but Christians, enlightened, civilized and moral men. The events of the last year furnish abundant proofs for the truth of our assertion. It is proved that the Jews in the capital have fattened pigs with the dead bodies of dogs. This proved that they have poisoned the bread at Tekoutsch, and the corpse, found at Bakau, of a Christian boy, who had been stabbed and whose blood had been taken out, together with other similar examples, are sufficient proofs that the Jews continue to commit the diabolical crimes of which they are guilty in the past. Has the police taken any measures against the Jews? We know of none. But this we know, that the Jews are menacing us, and that the people begin already to arise. And it is high time they should.

We fully agree with the Roum. Post that a critique of these comments of the press is quite superfluous.

Of all our places of enjoyment none offers as many varieties of amusements as Woodward's Gardens, which in fact surpasses all of its kind now in existence on the Pacific Coast. Performances and concerts are given every day, and the visitors enjoy a jolly time during their stay in the garden. The many attractions, which this place offers to every one has made it the most popular recreation ground, not alone in San Francisco, but even in California.

A PEEP INTO THE ORIENT.

The dusky pestilence, whose feet-footed team had transported me from Roumania to that land of intelligence and culture, Austria, now deposited me in the royal Hungarian frontier town, Old Orsova, before the hotel "To the Crown." Here I alighted and granted my weary limbs, fairly knocked to pieces by the mad ride, the necessary repose and relaxation. With the return of physical strength, however, I felt a renewed longing for activity and determined upon a ramble in search of interesting sights. It required no effort on my part to discover a remunerative goal for my expedition. Yonder in the Danube, at a distance of a league the Turkish island, New Orsova, beckoned to me invitingly with her whitewashed houses and brown fortification walls. From this island, inhabited solely by Turks, I could leisurely survey a large part of Turkey, and study genuine Oriental life as it unrolled itself before my eyes. I started forthwith for the cordon commando to procure a passport. The chief of the bureau a major, received me very politely, and within a few minutes handed me the desired papers, placing, at the same time, with praiseworthy courtesy, a boat, oarsmen, and an interpreter at my disposal. Returning to my quarters, I met there a Hungarian professor and his young wife, who solicited permission to join me in my excursion. Nothing could be said against such pleasant company, and, indeed, the most ill-humored grumbler could scarcely have raised an objection. I myself never enjoyed anything in life more heartily than travelling with good, agreeable companions.

In about an hour the officer sent to serve as interpreter arrived and led us to the Skala, or custom house, situated on the bank of the Danube. The boat, with three soldiers as rowers, lay in readiness; we got in, and the light craft, swift as an arrow, shot across the green waves of the mighty river toward the island. The verdant mountains of Servia gleamed to our right, while the plain of the Cerna river, which here empties its steel-blue waters into the Danube, stretched away to our left.

Our rowers worked right gallantly, singing the while, as a kind of distraction, a thrilling Wallachian ballad, to which their splashing oars kept time. Nearer and nearer we approached the island; the crumbling walls of the once so important fortress grew more and more distinct, and already we could discern the Turkish soldiers marching up and down its bastions. The island is about a square mile in extent, sufficiently elevated, and protected from inundations at high tide by a row of outlying sand-hills. From a distance it presents the appearance of a yellowish green range, its weather-beaten enclosures projecting like so many rocks. The boat approached the landing place. Several negro soldiers, who had been bathing near the shore, now swam towards it, uttering loud cries and splashing down in the mire. In answer to their call a Turkish soldier appeared and welcomed us. He was dressed in a brown plash jacket faced with red, a trunk hose wide down to the knees, and converted into a pair of leggings below; a high red fez or tarbush served as covering for the head, and a pair of loose slippers encased his feet. After having slipped us by placing his hand upon his breast, he asked in tolerably broken Servian for the cause of our visit and for our papers. We replied briefly, requesting to be taken to the Pasha or governor of the island, where we would make ourselves known. Along a row of green walls and between half dilapidated bastions, from which moulting ruins threateningly hung, the tobacco, or sergeant, led us to an open place. Here stood the Pasha's residence, a one-story building with high foundation walls, small Turkish windows, and low roof. Up a flight of rickety wooden stairs we ascended into the gloomy edifice, passing a number of sentinels, who, enlightened by our leader, respectfully made way for us. On entering the ante-chamber, a room lined with brown wood and supported on two wooden columns, we were asked by the tobacco to take off our boots, and enter barefoot, as etiquette required. "Do no such thing," whispered the interpreter; "it is not necessary. On the contrary, we will be treated with greater deference if we do not submit to the custom."

Consequently we refused to do so. The Turk, however, pulled off his slippers, and placing them on the floor next to a dozen others arrayed in rank and file, trotted on barefoot before us till he reached a thickly curtained door. He drew aside the vermilion-covered hangings, and we stepped into the governor's reception-room, a square chamber very large, but scarcely measuring seven feet in height. The walls are decked with gaudily-painted wood-work, and the ceiling was daubed over with the most glaring colors in true Turkish, or more accurately speaking, in true Gypsy style. Delicately-twisted wooden gratings replaced the wanting glass-panes of the small windows, and through the purple muslin curtains a stream of glowing light poured into the room. A low divan, on which were strewn a quantity of soft bolsters and spreads, stretched along the walls; even the floor was covered with a soft Persian carpet. Everything—light, air, and furniture—calculated to invite sleep; everything seemed prepared for sleep only. At a distance of two feet from the floor rose six inches, so that those entering stood in a sort of depression. Here we stopped. Surrounded by a peculiar rosette twilight, a tall, manly figure in the blue uniform of a Turkish officer, the red fez with blue tassels on his head, advanced towards us. This was the governor, grand, imposing personage. He stepped forward as far as the depression, and responded to our formal obeisance with a sonorous Salam Aleikum (Peace be with you). Turning to our interpreter, he made inquiries concerning us, apparently satisfied with the information, demanded no papers. Then addressing us in the best sounding French, he said: "May the course of your life be even as the surface of the water. Enter; you are welcome."

He himself led the lady to the divan, while a gentle wave of his hand directed the professor and myself to be seated. He clasped his hands, and a black slave, who equated in the remotest part of the room, suddenly jumped up and vanished through a side door. He reappeared soon after with pipes, coffee and sherbet, with which he waited on us. The pipes were splendidly inlaid with gold and amber, and filled with a tobacco which could better be passed under the designation of perfume. According to the Oriental fashion, the coffee was presented in two cups, the china one in the fragrant, brown liquid seemed still to boil, being placed in a silver cup. While comfortably sipping our genuine Mocha, the Mirial, or Colonel, grew talkative, and treated us to a short dissertation of his life, told us of his descent from the Bedouin Arabs, how he had first served the Viceroy of Egypt, but, after the rise of the Ottomans, offered his services to the Sultan of Turkey. Tolerably unbiased in his opinions, his freedom from Turkish fanaticism was attested clearly enough by several champagne bottles, whose shining silver heads glittered in a corner of the room.

The professor's lady inquired after the Mirial's wives, expressing her desire to pay them a visit. She learned to her regret that these had gone to their friends for a "nap." In the Orient, an invitation from a lady to her friend, instead of being worded like our "Bring your sewing along, and we will have a chat," runs "Come, we will sleep to our heart's content." This is indeed the only thing the poor, imprudent, uneducated creatures are able to do. Time pressed. We bade adieu to the governor and left, after having obtained from him the most generous permission to inspect the island.

In the ante-chamber we found our tea-chamber waiting for us. We expressed a wish to be led to the barracks. The Turkish barracks are low one-story buildings, scantily covered with shingles. A covered passage running around the building serves the guard as protection against the rain. Before each barrack a sentinel paces up and down, inseparably followed by a splendid blueish-grey Syrian cat. A number of the animals also wandered about inside. The interior of the building corresponded to its exterior. The rooms are low, the floor covered with matting, and lying about like a shoal of herrings were dense rows of soldiers staring at the ceiling or buried in sound sleep. Withal, everything bore the appearance of neatness and cleanliness. We extended our tour to the military kitchen, from which appetizing fumes were being wafted towards us. The viands, just prepared in two immense caldrons, consisted of boiled rice and stewed beef, mixed with all kinds of vegetables, turnips, carrots, potatoes, as well as Spanish pepper and that favorite Turkish fruit, the tomato. I found them quite savory to the taste. Before its distribution every dish must be tasted by the Mirial. This took place now, too, the meals being, after the proper subdivision by the cooks, carried by the soldiers on cross-bars to the barracks.

TOLERANCE OF THE FRENCH GENERAL RAPP.

TRANSLATED FROM THE "ISRA. WOCH."

About the year 1808, business transactions brought the merchant Moses Cassel, alias Moris Leo, from Berlin to Danzig. When he had reached the place of his destination, he went to the exchange; but no sooner had he been recognized there, than one of the officials of the building ran up to him and told him bluntly, if not coarsely, that no Jew was allowed by the statutes to visit the Danzig exchange, and that he had, therefore, better leave at once, so as not to involve himself in difficulties. The Berlin Jews, at least those who distinguished themselves by culture and position, acted, at that time, a prominent part in the Prussian capital, and had for a number of decades no more been used to such disgraceful treatment as Moses Cassel met with at Danzig. Since the unlimited power of the Berlin Junkers had been broken, all those who did not belong to the nobility sided together, and all social distinctions between Christians and Jews were abolished, so that there existed a complete equality than there ever is now. Taking this state of affairs into consideration, it is not surprising that Moses Cassel was deeply incensed at the slight he had received. But what could he do? As the telegraph had not yet been invented, he indited a letter to the Board of the Berlin congregation, stating his grievances and soliciting them to interest themselves in his behalf and to come in aid to him, for the purpose of preventing the repetition of the insult offered in his person to the entire Berlin congregation, nay to the Jewish community at large. This letter was forwarded to Berlin by a courier. Reuben Samuel Gumpertz, who was then President of the Board, received and read the document, and went to work without delay. He thought it would have been losing time first to convene a meeting of his colleagues, who, for the rest, could not entertain the same views with him. Gumpertz had not to go far for redress. There lived in his neighborhood a French officer of rank, with whom he was on intimate terms; he called upon this gentleman and informed him of the incident. The officer declared that the proceedings of the Danzig merchants were highly improper and obsolete, and that those old fogies ought to be brought to reason. He introduced Gumpertz to the French commandant of Berlin, who was quite of the same opinion, and handed him a letter of recommendation for Mr. Leo to General Rapp, who was at that time Governor of Danzig. The courier brought this letter to Leo, who handed it immediately to Rapp. The latter felt indignant at the insult offered to the Jews; and having been informed of all the particulars, he summoned two gentlemen to his presence. "Have a good look at this gentleman," he said to them; "so that you are able to recognize him; to-morrow, at exchange time, you have to go to the exchange and select there a place that will allow you, without attracting too much attention, to see who goes in or out; and as soon as this gentleman gives you a hint, you have either both or one of you, to go near him and protect him from molestation."

The ensuing day, at noon, our Leo went to exchange; still, he did not enter the building until he had previously convinced himself that his guardian angels were at their post, with their huge three-cornered hats, their immense moustaches and their sabres. They noticed him at once and gave him a look of recognition. Moses Cassel spoke French very fluently. He entered quite erect, and was greeted with murmurs and such exclamations as: "There is that Jew again, what does the impudent Jew want, where is the janitor? get out!" The janitor hastened to the spot and addressed Leo in the most insolent tone, saying: "I told you, not long ago, that Jews are not admitted here. If you don't clear out this moment, I will—"

"Clear out!" echoed the merchants in chorus. "What do mean? Expel me? Do you really want to make me clear out and quick at that?" now interposed Leo, cautiously nearing the entrance, and beckoning the guardians to approach. They came immediately the rescue, exclaiming: "In the name of the Governor, whoever molests this gentleman is our prisoner!" The rest is easily fancied.

On that very day an edict was issued to the effect that no decent merchant could be refused admittance to the Danzig exchange, and that social distinctions owing to difference of religion did no more exist. Since that time the Danzig Jews go to exchange. For a long time they made there on the Sabbath a "mishberach" for R. Reuben ben R. Samuel; if such is still practiced, I know not.—H. L.

Die Kunst bei den alten Hebräern.

I. Die Musik.

Aus einem hochinteressanten Vortrage des Dr. L. Herzfeld über die Kunstleistungen der Hebräer, erlauben wir uns heute den Lesern des „Hebrew“ die nachfolgenden, auf Quellenstudien beruhenden Angaben vorzuführen, die dem Leser um so willkommen sein werden, als bekanntlich dem jüdischen Stamme die heutigen Töne von Judentum, so z. B. von Richard Wagner in Bezug auf Musik aller Kunstsinne abgesprochen wird.

Wir beginnen mit der Musik bei den alten Hebräern. — Einige Musikkenntnisse müssen die Hebräer schon aus Ägypten mitgebracht haben: das bezeugt Moses' Gesang am Meere und daß seine Schwester mit der Adassa ihn auch für die Frauen intonierte. Von den ersten folgenden Jahrhunderten der jüdischen und jüdischen Kulturzeit war kein Fortschritt in dieser Kunst zu erwarten; und daß wie gleichwohl zu Ende derselben die hebräische Tonkunst schon fast fertig ausgebildet finden, kann uns von vorne herein dafür bürgen, daß Anlage und mächtige Liebe zur Musik in diesem Volke war. Woß beläufig sei erwähnt, daß dem jüdischen Hebraisten, Saul, Frauen mit Gesang zur Adassa und Triangel aus allen Orten entgegen zogen. Aber daß man dieses Könige Schweremuth durch Harfenspiel verschleichen wollte, und daß dem Hirtentönen David dies wirklich gelang, zeigt uns, daß damals diese Kunst schon bedeutend fortgeschritten und verbreitet war. Noch höher muß sie an den Prophetensingen entwickelt gewesen sein, welche wir damals zuerst erwähnt finden: eine Pflanze der Tonkunst als Vorbereitung zum Prophetensingen und die wiederholte Nachricht, daß ihre von Instrumenten begleitete Gesänge Saul und Andere in prophetische Ekstase versetzt hätten (1. Sam. 10, 10. — 19, 20 — 24) wären sonst geradezu undenkbar.

Und daß David seine Harfe ausreichte fand zu seinen Psalmen, die alle Höhen und Tiefen des Gemüthes ausmessen, ihn zu erwecken, und sie durch ihr Spiel zu begleiten, das spricht dafür, daß er die Einfachheit dieses Instruments durch musikalischen Genus zu ergänzen verstand. Am vollendeten war aber bei den Hebräern die Tempelmusik: Während nämlich seit Moses den Hebräern nur silberne Trompeten begleiteten, wurde jetzt wohl schon von David, umfassen der nach Salomo's Bau des Tempels mit dem Dienste in diesem Vokal- und Instrumentalmusik verbunden und allmählich wurden beide immer mehr vollkommen.

Nach dem babylonischen Exil wird man wohl nicht füglich, aber doch mit der Zeit die frühere Stufe hierin wieder erreicht und vielleicht gar überholt haben, denn in der biblischen Chronik aus jener Zeit hat die Tempelmusik immer den ersten Platz erhalten. In jener späteren Zeit finden sich auch einige Spuren griechischer Einflüsse auf die jüdische Tonkunst; aber von äußerlich geringem Belang. — Die Instrumente der Hebräer waren von dreierlei Gattung: 1. Schlaginstrumente, nämlich außer Adassa, Tamburin und Triangel, die schon erwähnt wurden, auch Pauken und Becken, auch ist zu ihnen das Sistrum zu zählen, welches geschüttelt, ein Klingeln hervorbrachte. 2. Blasinstrumente, als Trompete, Horn, die gewöhnliche Flöte, die Sphing, aus mehreren aneinandergerückten Rohrflößen verschiedener Länge und Dicke bestehend, und die sogenannte Liebesflöte lagab. In späterer Zeit diente man im Tempel auch ein Pfeifenwerk Nagrefa, dem mit harter Uebertreibung zugeföhrt wurde, (Nagrefa, 11. a. Sam. 3, 8.) das es zu hundert verschiedenen Tönen eingerichtet war und Stundenlang gehört werden sei. 3. Saiteninstrumente, die Harfe und der an Zahl der Saiten und der durch Toncharakter von ihr verschiedene Psalter (Kibel), später auch die Kithar und die heilbringende Sambuka. Es wird aber den Einblick in die hebräische Musik erweitern, wenn wir suchen, bei welchen Anlässen sie vorkam und welche von diesen Instrumenten bei den verschiedenen Anlässen erwähnt sind. Es ist hierfür nur vorauszusetzen, daß meistens Gesang und Spiel verbunden waren, und die Saiteninstrumente selbst den Gesang ausfüllten. Außerdem war die weltliche Musik zuerst. Beim Tanze schlugen die Tänzerinnen selbst das Tambourin dazu (Jeremia 31, 4.); auch sahen wir schon, daß tanzende Frauen und Mädchen den heimkehrenden Saul mit Gesang, begleitet von Handtrommel und Triangel empfingen. In Salomo's Kronungsgeuge erlangten Flöten und Hörner. Bei einem Abschiedsgeleite finden wir Gesang, Tambourin und Harfe erwähnt. (1. Mose 31, 27.) Die Liebesflöte hatte wohl ihren Namen von schwachenden Ständen junger Liebhaber. Doch griffen diese auch wohl zu Harfe und Psalter, welche die gewöhnlichen Instrumente gesangsfähiger Männer und Jünglinge waren. Auch ist auf eine Harfenistin im heutigen Sinne einmal angeführt, (Sofia 23, 16.) jedoch ohne Bezug auf hebräische Mädchen. Bei Gastmählern und besonders beim Weile hatte man Gesänge zu Harfe und Psalter Tambourin und Flöte, also eigentlich Tafelmusik; aber auch Weinlieder der Jünglinge selbst. (Sof. 5, 12. — 12. — 35, 3 — 6. Amos 6, 5. Klage 5, 14.) Bei Heimführung einer Braut war lärmende Musik. (Vergl. Jerem. 25, 10. mit 1. Makkab. 9, 39.); aber bei der eigentlichen Hochzeitsfeier waren nur Flöten üblich, und diese merkwürdigerweise auch bei Beerdigungen; in späterer Zeit wurde es sogar Brauch, daß selbst der Leiche des Verstorbenen zwei Flöten vorangetragen. (V. meja 6. — 1. Schabbat 4, 4.) Ihr schweremüthiges Ton machte sie freilich sehr tauglich hierzu. Jeremia, als er Moabs Untergang prophezeit, ruft theilnehmend einmal: „Um Moab köhnt wie die Flöte mein Herz.“ Doch war, wie wir auch später noch sehen werden, die Anwendung dieses Instruments eine so verschiedenartige und eigenenthümliche, daß es zugleich eine symbolische Bedeutung gehabt zu haben scheint. Kriegsmusik als solche kommt nicht vor; die bei Kriegesgelegenheiten erwähnten Hörner dienten bloß zu Signalen; doch informen sich das Volk im Kampfe mit Flöten als Gottesstreit anfang, wurde oft das religiöse Moment hineingezogen und hierzu gelegentlich religiöse Musik verwendet.

Berlin. — Die jüdische Gemeinde beginnt am Sonntag den 10. September das Fest ihres z w e i t e n j ä h r i g e n Bestehens. Der Feiertag in der neuen Synagoge wohnen auch geladene Gäste bei, unter ihnen die Deputationen der städtischen Behörden, an ihrer Spitze der Oberbürgermeister und die Stadtverordneten-Vorsteher. Dem ohnehin prächtigen Schmucke des Gotteshauses hatte man blühende Gewächse hinzugefügt, welche den Altarraum umgaben. Orgel und Posannenschall unterstützte die Festgesänge, welche der Synagogenorchester erklingen ließ. Die Liturgie war dem Festtage angemessen zusammengefaßt. Nachdem Rabbiner Dr. Geiger ein Gebet gesprochen, stimmte der Chor folgendes Dantelied an:

Aus dunkler Nacht hat Deine Nacht
Gebahnt uns, Herr, des Lichtes Pfad;
Ach schwer und bang war unser Gang,
Doch unser Gott war Deine Gnade.

In dunkler Nacht hast Du gewacht,
Wenn Leid und Drangsal uns bedröhnte;
Wir trugen fort das Gotteswort
Die Erb' entlang als treue Boten.

Aus dunkler Nacht zu heller Pracht
Gast Du die Zeiten, Herr, gestaltet;
Ein Jubelchor ertönt Dir empor
Der gnädig über uns gewaltet.

Seiner Festpredigt legte Dr. Geiger 1. Mose 32, 10. zu Grunde. Ich bin zu geringe, sprach Jakob an einem ernsten Abschnitte seines Lebens, für alle Genadenbeweise und für alle die liebevolle Treue, die Du Deinem Knechte erwiesen hast. Mit meinem Wanderhabe bin ich über diesen Jordan geschritten und bin nun zu einem Doppeltage gekommen. — Und er gelobte, ein treuer Diener seinem Gotte zu sein und in seinen Wegen zu wandeln. So tritt heute das junge Geschlecht dieser Gemeinde vor Gott, und spricht mit gleicher Demuth es aus: Wir sind ein Doppeltage geworden sowohl im Bürgerthum, das rüstig schaffte, wie im Gebiete des Geistes, der sich heut' frei emporheben darf zu Gott. — In einem Gleichnisse vom Wanderer führte der Redner die Geschichte des jüdischen Volkes und speziell dieser Gemeinde aus. Der rastlose Wanderer war das Volk selbst; von heutigen Tag aber begannen die Mitglieder der Gemeinde als freie Bürger, als Söhne dieses Vaterlandes, als ebenbürtige, mündigende und gleichberechtigte Mitglieder der Gemeinschaft. Das Volk, vor 900 Jahren aus der Wüste des Reiches vertrieben, zog ein in die Mark Brandenburg, als sich ein neuer Weg, wenn auch noch nicht unter harter Schale, in derselben regte. Heute könne die Gemeinde mit Jauchz ausrufen: Wir schließen uns einem neuen Bund; den Bund der Menschlichkeit, der Völkerverbrüderung, des geistigen Aufschwungs. Befestigt hat ihn die Gemeinde mit ihrem Blute, welches für das Vaterlandes Ehre, Sicherheit, Kraft und Entwicklung vergossen worden ist; befestigt aber hat sie ihn auch noch mit einem edleren Saft, mit dem Schweiße, der von der Stirn der Denker rann, mit dem Weisthume in ehrenvoller rüstiger Friedensarbeit auf dem Gebiete der Wissenschaften und Künste. Dankbar gebente die Gemeinde derer, die für sie gerungen, eines Moses Wandelersohn, Daniel, Friedländer, Wolfsohn, Ephraim Leising, Dr. W. W. Dohm. Sie alle haben den neuen Bund vorbereitet. So möge denn die Gemeinde auch diesen Bund in Wahrheit umschließen, in dem Geiste, der sie groß gemacht hat. Streifen wir ab die letzten Reste des Mittelalters, suchen wir die Einheit im Innern, wie sie im Neuen geschaffen ist. Verwerfen wir nicht die Lehren mit engerlicher Auslegung. Geloben wir Treue und Eingebunden und sichern wir nicht die letzten Reste des Kampfes, den unsere Vorfahren bisher so glücklich geführt haben. Die Pflege des Geistes wird die echte Bewahrerin der Einheit der Gemeinde sein. — Ein Gebet um den Segen Gottes, in welches auch der Kaiser und König eingeschlossen wurde, bildete den Beschluß der Predigt. Mit dem großen Gellulah (Psalm 150) endete die gottesdienstliche Feier des Tages.

Zwei Tage später erhielt die ehefrühere Frau den Besuch einer Freundin, die ihr bittend vorwarf, darüber nicht zu haben. In ihre Wohnung aufgenommen zu haben. Das Ende war, daß die Frau aus dem von ihr gemietheten und vorausbezahlten Zimmer gewaltsam hinausgetrieben wurde. THE SANCTIFICATION OF GOD.

"Ye shall not profane my holy name, but I will be hallowed among the children of Israel: I am the Lord, who halloweth you."—Lev. xlii. 32.

This precept is not addressed to the priests alone, but appeals to the whole nation of Israel for they were all to be priests of the Most High.

They were the first to worship and acknowledge the Only One; to them the Divine will was first revealed; to them the great mission was entrusted to promulgate the sublime truths of Revelation among the whole of mankind. God has chosen them to be His peculiar nation; He had even called them His children, and thus entered into a close and intimate relationship with them, and He therefore had a right to demand from them, that He should be "hallowed in their midst."

These words teach us that every virtue which the Israelites practiced, every pious action which he performs, every good deed which he carries out, is not merely regarded as meritorious in itself, but is also a sanctification of the name of God. If such a lofty idea may be compared with trivial earthly things, we may say, that as child that distinguishes itself at school and carries off high prizes, does not alone bring credit to itself, but also causes joy to its parents and teachers, who feel as if the commendation had been bestowed upon themselves; so the Lord rejoices, when the Israelite distinguishes himself by pious and virtuous actions. He regards it as if his own holy name had been hallowed and exalted. But on the other hand, even as a father feels the stigma attach to himself when his son has been guilty of a degrading action, so the sins of Israel, their blemishes and shortcomings, have a doubly baneful character. They not only exercise a damaging influence upon him who is guilty of them; they also lower the glory of God; they profane His sacred name.

There are, we may safely assert, no two words that have exercised such a wonderful effect upon our nation as the words "ח'ל" "the Sanctification of God." None have acquired a deeper, a more thrilling significance in our history. For when the temple had been destroyed and Israel was dispersed amongst the nations, these two words became two stars, which always shone brightly and steadily in the heaven of their faith. Then these words created countless heroes, numerous martyrs, who throughout their whole lives, and with their lives, hallowed the name of God.

At the time when bitter revengeful persecution and blind fanaticism raged against us, when the nations amongst whom we dwelt were not content with caging us like wild beasts, and treading us under foot like loathsome reptiles, but would also make us turn away from our God, then our watchword was—"Lay down your life on the altar of your religion," suffer death rather than become unfaithful to the Lord, so that it may be known, that the worshippers of the true God can be tortured, put upon the rack, eye, bound to the stake, but that they cannot be forced to deny their belief.

Need we tell you, how this precept was carried into practice? Need we tell you the names of all the congregations who laid down their lives for the sake of their religion? More than lions were they strong; more than eagles were they swift to do their Maker's will. They awaited in calmness the too slowly rising flames of the stake, they nerved themselves to bear excruciating tortures, they smilingly plunged the dagger into their breast. Then the blood of affectionate fathers was mingled with that of their sons, the blood of tender mothers with that of the babes, the blood of the bridegroom with that of his blooming bride, the blood of the wise with that of the unlearned, the blood of the teacher with that of his pupil.

Even in our own country, our brethren many hundred years ago had thus to sanctify their God. One of the ancient chroniclers, (William of Newbury), relates a tragic scene, which cannot fail to draw tears from every sympathetic eye. During the reign of Richard I. the Jewish inhabitants were terribly persecuted. At York they had retreated into the castle. During the six days, which the siege had lasted, they had valiantly repelled the attack of their enemies; but at length their small stock of provisions became exhausted, and they saw that they could not hold out much longer. They therefore held a council among themselves to deliberate upon what they should do. Their oldest Rabbi, Rabbi Jom Tob of Joigny (in France) rose up and said:—"The God of our fathers, to whom none can say, 'What doest Thou?' commands us to die for His Law. A glorious death is preferable to an ignominious life. Let us surrender the life, which the Creator has given us, into His own hands. This example has been set to us by many of our illustrious and pious ancestors."

There were but very few who did not assent to this proposal. The heroic Rabbi set about carrying the resolution into effect. First, the belonged burnt all their property, then they set fire to several parts of the castle, and finally each man plunged the dagger into the bosom of his beloved wife and children. What a fearful illustration is this of ח'ל! Let us with all our heart thank Divine Providence, who guides us so miraculously, that those fearful times are past when we had to sanctify Him with our life blood!

But nevertheless the precept, "I will be hallowed among the children of Israel," has not lost aught of its significance for us. It has retained all its importance, all its vigor; only its claims upon us are different now-a-days. The precept need not be taught any more in the dark streets of the Ghetto, or in a secluded quarter of the city, not merely in the synagogue or in the schools, but in the busy marts of commerce, in the shop and in the warehouse, in the factory and in the counting-house, in the council chamber and in the senate. Now that the walls of intolerance which formerly surrounded us have, like the walls of Jericho, fallen at the trumpet blast of civil and religious liberty, we stand, with our religion and our character, openly before the world. The eyes of our neighbors are upon us; they judge of our religion by the conduct of its professors. If they see faults and shortcomings in us, they attribute them to our faith. And, therefore, if we do anything that brings discredit upon the name of a Jew, we are guilty of the profanation of the name of God.

If our neighbors see that we are cold and indifferent to our religion, it will be said that our religion has no vitality; if we are selfish and unloving, it will be said that our God is not a God of love; if we do not observe the most scrupulous honesty and integrity in all our actions, it will be asserted—monstrous charge!—that our code regards morality as a secondary thing; if we devote the Sabbath merely to physical rest, it will be said, that we are not enjoined to keep that day as a day of devotion and reflection.

Let us always bear in mind, "God has given us His Law, in order that we might sanctify His great name." It must be our steady purpose, in the daily putting forth of our life's energies, to accomplish this great end. We must evince in all our dealings, the pure and sublime ideas of Judaism, the Jewish precepts of humanity and philanthropy, justice and truth, the loyalty it enjoins toward our sovereign and our country, the sympathy it demands for the suffering, "so that all the people of the earth shall see, that we are called by the name of the Lord."

There are many who say, I do all my duties as a Jew; I attend the synagogue regularly, I read my prayers there, and contribute to its maintenance according to my means.

Let us tell you that there can be no more erroneous belief than that you need be a Jew only in the synagogue, and that when you have put away your Prayer-book and Tallith, all your duties, which you owe as an Israelite, have ended. No; then your great duty of ח'ל commences. Do not think that you sanctify the name of God, by merely proclaiming in the synagogue the Kedusha, with which the angels worship Him. When you have left the house of prayer, you must practically sanctify God by leading a pure and holy life, by keeping your hands from every low and mean action, from everything that could tend in the remotest way to sully the name of a Jew.

Thanks to God, in the annals of darker crimes a Jewish name is but seldom discerned. Oh that guilt and wrong-doing might never be mentioned with the name of an Israelite! Oh that the words ח'ל which stimulated our forefathers to live and die for their religion, which in days not far distant have founded noble charities, built asylums, endowed schools, and erected houses of prayer, would exercise their magic charm still!

You say, What can I do? I am but a poor man, I have scarcely anything to spare from my scanty earnings; I have no influence, no talents, by which I can do any good. Well, dear reader, we do not expect you to do much by yourself, but we want you to join with the community in every good and noble object. If you cannot give your dollars to some excellent charity, you can give your cents, and you can collect cents, which will soon amount to dollars. You say, you cannot do much to promote education in the community; you can see that your children attend school with punctuality; you can see that they profit by their attendance. Rely upon it that your example will work wonders with your neighbors.

You will find something similar to this in Nature. You have heard, we suppose, of the coral reefs round the islands in the Pacific, which stretch their unbroken walls for many miles along the sea. They consist of the work of tiny little animals of the shallow seas. But though those that build them are so insignificant, the aggregate of their labors is gigantic, rivaling the greatest breakwater that ever man has constructed. In like manner, the greatest good may be effected, if only every man and every woman will feel his or her individual responsibility, and will work, each in his own sphere, to sanctify the Lord God of Israel.

God will be hallowed among the children of Israel, by their diligently keeping His precepts. The happiness, peace, and freedom which we are now enjoying, must not make us less diligent in the observance of our holy law; no; it must increase our love, our enthusiasm, our devotion to our faith. We must show how we value and understand the perennial, never-fading beauty of the words of the Covenant, we must show that they are not like a garment which we may at pleasure don and lay aside, but that they are inseparable from us,—part and parcel of our existence.

God will be sanctified in us. He has given us His Law of fire, which during thousand of years has been strengthening, animating, and quickening us to good and holy deeds. And all the civilized nations of the earth have been kindling the flames of their religions at this mighty fire. Let us tend and guard that fire zealously, that it may ever burn upon the altars of our hearts, that it shall never go out. Then shall we be deemed worthy to be priests of the Most High; then shall we receive our reward from the Lord, who halloweth us.

CORRESPONDENCE OF "THE HEBREW."

SAN DIEGO, September 29, 1871.
EDITOR HEBREW:—I have seen a good many items of interest to the Jewish inhabitants of this coast from many places in your valuable paper, and thought of sending some to you, of this part of the world, so as to let the Israelites know of the doings of the most extreme southwestern city in the United States: San Diego is the oldest city in California; the Mission here was founded in July, 1769, more than 102 years ago. Yet three years ago but two Jewish families resided here, gradually the number increased, so that we have now fourteen families and are classified as follows:—about fifty men, fourteen women and thirty-four children. About two years ago, steps were taken to form either a congregation or a benevolent society, but the lack of spirit at that time prevented it. We had religious meetings here on Rosh Hashonah and Jom Hakippur since 1869, and Mr. Marcus Schiller, one of our oldest inhabitants in the city, had formerly kindly offered his parlor for that purpose, but this year, the number of Israelites here increased to such an extent, that the room formerly occupied, was too small for religious services. Mr. Louis Rose, one of the most worthy and oldest members of the Jewish fraternity here, kindly offered the rooms formerly occupied by the Free Masons, and fitted the same up in splendid style. Before going any further, I must mention that we were lucky to secure the services of Rev. Mr. Mayer; this gentleman had applied for the vacant place of Reader, Teacher and Shochet, at Los Angeles, but on reaching that place was too late to secure it. Rev. Mr. Mayer then condescended to come to this place and make it his future home, and as you will find it further down, was engaged as Reader and Teacher here. In the afternoon, on the second day of Rosh Hashonah, while the greatest portion of the Jewish inhabitants met accidentally, a proposition was made to form a society, and Erav Jom Hakippur was appointed as the day of our organization. The appointed day arrived and every member present was animated with the spirit of benevolence, and in an hour a society was formed, and called the First Hebrew Benevolent Society of San Diego; the object of the society is not necessary to mention, as its title expresses all that is needed. An election followed with the following result: Marcus Schiller, President; Isidor Mathias, Vice-President; Charles Wolfheimer, Secretary; Joseph S. Manasse, Treasurer; Heiman Solomon, Rudolph Schiller and A. Klaber, Trustees. The Constitution and By-Laws of the Los Angeles Congregation were with a few exceptions, preliminary adopted during the meeting. Rev. Mr. Mayer was presented, and after a few remarks as to his abilities, the society engaged him as Reader and Teacher. Before our meeting closed, forty signed their names as members. This is quite a respectable number to start with, but the funds are yet in their infancy; though we have some property which, I have no doubt, will some of these days become very valuable. This property consists of five acres of land, which Mr. Louis Rose has kindly tendered to the society, and not to be outdone in a benevolent act, Messrs. Manasse & Schiller donated the material for a fence; of these five acres, one of them was enclosed for a Jewish cemetery, and I am sorry to say, there are three graves in there already—the last one is the ever lamented Bertha Barnett, wife of Julius Barnett. In regard to the social feeling among our Jewish inhabitants, I most candidly say, I have never before been in a place where such kindness and friendship prevails, and must say that it looks more like one vast family, poor and rich, no distinction—in fact, the same must have appeared so to a casual observer, who was present at the tables of Messrs. Schiller, Rose and Solomon, as the respective ladies tried their best not to be out done by each other.

I will now finish for the present, and shall let you know of doings here from time to time. Yours truly, OSEID NAS.

MEYERSON THEATRE.—The great sensational piece of Schneider is an immense success, the house being crowded nightly and immense applause testifying to the excellency of Mr. Allen's acting. Saturday afternoon next, a Grand Matinee will be given for the benefit of ladies and children, and Sunday evening there will be a grand holiday performance.

ALHAMBRA THEATRE.—God Momois reigns supreme at this cozy place of amusement. Emerson's new eocentric song "The Drum Major" is alone worth the price of admission. Saturday afternoon, Grand Matinee, and Sunday evening, performance.

CALIFORNIA THEATRE.—Mrs. D. P. Bowers continues her engagement at this theatre with great success, the house being crowded nightly.

THE GREAT CHICAGO FIRE.—From Sunday till Wednesday morning, the most disastrous conflagration, which ever visited a city in the United States or the Old World, laid the splendid city Chicago in ashes, destroying hundreds of Millions of property and rendering over 100,000 people homeless, as soon as the news reached our city, meetings of citizens, lodges, etc., were called to devise means to aid the unfortunate Chicagoans. The different Theatres gave benefits and over $65,000 have been brought together so far.

AMONG the contributors for the sufferers in Chicago, our co-religionists figure prominently as the following list shows:

John Rosenfeld, $1,000; J. Seligman & Co., $1,000; Lazard Freres, $1,000; Fred. L. Castle, $500; A. S. Rosenbaum & Co., $500; Rev. Dr. Elkan Cohn, $25; Isaac Wormser, $250; John J. Marks, $250; W. M. Greenwood, $100; J. W. Davidson & Co., $250; M. Mayblum, $50; Wm. Seligberg, $200; B. Davidson & Co., $1,000.

MEETING.—The Hebrews' Ladies Sewing Society will hold a meeting for the purpose of giving aid for the Chicago sufferers, to-day, at 1 o'clock P. M., at Concordia Hall, on Sutter street.

It has been thought that several of our local insurance companies who had many and large risks in Chicago would be unable to meet their losses. We are glad to state that such is not the case. Among others, two of our best companies, the Pacific, and Fireman's Fund, will not alone meet their losses fully, but continue to do business as before. Mr. Staples, the worthy President of the Fireman's Fund, well and favorably known among our citizens, will proceed to-day for Chicago, and pay all claims against his company in full.

BECOME A MEMBER.—The board of Trustees of the Pacific Hebrew Orphan Asylum and Home, give notice in another column that for the purpose of facilitating the canvassing of this city, and to afford all opportunity of joining the Association, a membership roll will be kept at the office of the President, Isaac Wormser, north west corner California and Front streets. The dues are but a trifle, and we hope there will be very few indeed of our co-religionists who will refuse to sign the roll.

CALIFORNIA PHARMACEUTICAL SOCIETY.—At the third annual meeting of the California Pharmaceutical Society, held on Wednesday evening last, the following officers were elected to serve during the ensuing year: President, John A. Bauer; Vice-Presidents, E. Painter, W. Geary; Recording Secretary, W. E. Mayhew; Corresponding Secretary, W. T. Wenzell; Treasurer, W. J. Bryan; Executive Committee, Messrs. Calvert, Steele, Mayhew, Simpson and Wenzell.

EUREKA SOCIAL CLUB BALL.—The most brilliant ball ever given by the Eureka Social Club took place on Tuesday evening last, at Platt's Hall. We can safely say that never have we seen so many beautiful faces and forms together in a ball-room. The costumes of the ladies were grand. Our sister cities San Jose, Stockton and Sacramento, had sent their fairest daughters to grace the occasion with their presence. Ballenberg, although always good, fairly outdressed himself, playing with his double band, some entire new dance music in his best style. The Artillery Brass Band during the interval of dancing, gave some splendid concert music a selection from "Il Pericle" gifting them especially great applause. The hall was finely decorated with garlands and streamers; canary birds in gaudy cages mingled their tiny voices with the swelling notes of music. The supper provided by Messrs. Siegfried & Lohse, was really excellent. Everything on the table being plentiful and well cooked. The committee of arrangements can indeed be proud of this, their grand success.

EXIN SOCIAL CLUB BALL.—The subscription ball of the Exin Social Club, which came off on Monday evening last, at Pacific Hall, proved a great success. The ball room being well filled with fair ladies and gallant young men. The music by Ballenberg's band was very fine. Everybody enjoyed themselves to their hearts content, and it was early in the morning before the participants went home well pleased with their evening enjoyment. The committee of arrangement deserves credit for the manner in which they carried out their excellent programme.

UNDER auspices of Jeshurun Lodge No. 9, A. J. O. K. S. B., a Grand Vocal and Literary Entertainment in aid of the widow and orphans of the late Brother Ephraim, will be given. We hope that all Keshures and friends of the worthy deceased out of the Order will make it a point of honor to purchase tickets, and thereby show to the bereaved widow, that they remember in kindness the worth of our late brother. The entertainment will take place at Platt's Hall, on Monday evening, October 23d, next.

MR. WM. J. STODDART, the Pacific Agent of the "Underwriters" Agency of New York composed of The Germania, Hanover, Niagara, and Republic Fire Insurance Companies, received a telegraphic dispatch from the General Agent at New York stating that, after all the losses of the Agency in Chicago will be paid, their assets will yet be over two and one half millions dollars. Mr. Wm. J. Stoddart (No. 430 Montgomery street), will continue to issue and renew risks, and pay all losses incurred promptly, as heretofore.

Jews in Foreign Lands.

[CONCLUDED.]

Russia is a name which we approach with some hesitation. It seems that some doubt exists in the minds of well-meaning men as to the accuracy of the not unfrequent asseverations of the oppression of our brethren in the great Muscovite Empire. It is true that occasionally recruiting press-gangs enter Synagogues, as well as villages, and tear young men from their homes to serve as conscripts in the Russian army; it is true that peculiar measures are taken from time to time to induce the Jews of Russia to conform with the views of the government; it is true that wholesale deportations of families from Bessarabia take place; and Odessa governors wink at savage outrages against the Jews; but there seems a disposition to look leniently on all that Russia does. For this there is some ground. The intention of the present and of the late Czar to assimilate his Jewish subjects with the rest of their fellow countrymen cannot be censured. The truth is that the Jews of Russia constituted too long an imperium in imperio. They adhered too rigidly to ancient usages, costume, dialect, etc., which had nothing but habit to recommend them. Neither the sanctity of religion, nor expediency nor utility could be pleaded in their defence. Their self-concentration was hurtful to themselves, for it impeded their progress and their improvement and the development of their powers. It probably rendered them objects of mystery, and therefore of dislike to some of their fellow-citizens; objects of misconception, and therefore of ridicule and contempt to others. It was hurtful to the country of which they were citizens, because it prevented them from doing good and service to their father-land, and fulfilling those duties which, however onerous, they as citizens of the realm were morally bound to fulfill. Under these circumstances, the late Czar Nicholas, who, though he was sometimes deceived (as in the case of the causes which led to the Crimean war), was nevertheless a shrewd, intelligent man, desired to place his Jewish subjects in all possible respects on a level with his other subjects. His son and successor seems to entertain a like desire. If they occasionally proceed to enforce their wishes by means which seem to us peculiar, we should blame them less than the system under which they govern, and the circumstances by which they are surrounded. The gist of the matter is, that the Russian Jews are not happy; but, then, no one is happy in Russia. Discomfort is the normal state of a Muscovite; for the Czar on his throne to the Monk in his mud hovel. Let us hope that happier times may be in store for the vast empire of Eastern Europe—happier times for Jew and Gentile. The Russian Jews themselves should endeavor to improve their condition by means within their own power. They are behind hand in the question of education, and they themselves move in an orbit sufficiently elastic to permit of their remedying many defects within the limits in which they live.

In Denmark the Jews have been established for a very long period, and they hold a respectable position. They are mostly of German origin. A better picture of the Jewish life of Denmark is given in Goldschmidt's famous work, "Jacob Bendixen," than that any we could find.

In Sweden, where the Jews have settled within the memory of man, the position of the Jews seems evidently ameliorating, for a new synagogue has been established at Stockholm. In Norway, till quite recently, Jews were not admitted, and we are not certain that they have yet made good their footing there. This intolerance—which at one time was fully equalled in the sister kingdom of Sweden—seems singular in a Protestant country. It is completely at variance with the religious tolerance which is an appanage of Roman Catholicism; but this is not really the fact. Lutheran Scandinavia at one time vied in this respect with the Papal South—and not unsuccessfully.

In the East, the general condition of our brethren is, of course, not satisfactory, though it necessarily varies; but from the peculiar position of the Government of the Sultan with Eastern subjects, and the system of diplomatic interference and of consular jurisdiction which prevails, brings about a state of disquiet which is by no means conducive to internal prosperity, but which is, perhaps, a preferable expedient to have the evils of misrule resulting from a pro-consular Government. In some parts of the East, as for example in Persia, the position of our brethren is very melancholy. One sad instance of this was brought home to us recently by the sad accounts which reached us from Shiraz, where famine pressed with calamitous gravity on the unfortunate inhabitants. In Persia the Jews hold a specially apocryphal position. In Bagdad and also in certain parts of India there are Jewish merchants filling a most creditable position. The name of Sasson (originally a Bagdad family) is a household word in India: the great philanthropy and public spirit of this remarkable family are too well known to need comment. The head of the house conferred special advantages on the city in which he resided. But the ancient glories of the Jews of Bagdad have passed away. No Prince of theopitvity holds almost regal sway in the famous city of the Caliph, and this whilom cynapse of the "golden age" of the Dispersion no longer enjoys the presence of a chieftain having away over thousands of our race. The condition of the Jews of Palestine is a subject too extensive to be dealt with in this place and at this time. It is a serious topic which, one day, will require to be met in an exhaustive manner. Nothing is less improbable than that, in the event of an "Eastern Question" again surging on the ocean of politics, the Jewish phase of the question may force itself forward, just as at one time did the question of the Druses and Maronites. That the solution is to be found in the industrial development of the East, we can scarcely doubt. This seems to us the key of many a tangled problem. Where diplomacy and politics fail to secure the progress and prosperity of a country, or at least to remedy the maladies under which a country suffers, industrial science, if its aid were called in, might bring about favorable results. How few countries there are whose productive powers are fully developed, or even prudently applied! It is true that there is but little hope in the present condition of the world that "the sword will be beaten into the ploughshare, and the spear into pruning hook." The world under the present dispensation has taken another road; and it seems to be the fashion to beat ploughshares into swords and pruning hooks into spears; to construct weapons and missiles and engines and munition of war for use by land and sea, in the air and below the surface of the water, for the destruction of humanity and the annihilation of peace; to turn the hearts of fathers against their children and children against their fathers; as if purposely to proclaim that the Messianic reign has not yet arrived. But when the storm is at its darkest, we may hope to see the dawn of a new era. Thus it may not be far distant in the prospect to happier times of applied industry; needed; but, to the nation of our brethren regions of the world—pressed and inaccessibly means needful to bring them, we regard the brain of European as an important element in the industry would apply their own better knowledge of our brethren abroad which they dwell, the Jews and their tages. Until this day, we must greatly benevolence to remedy thousands of our brethren. Still, on the other hand, we are grateful for it. If only over the East, many a mist in the days are beaming Sweden, Italy and darkest, we may hope for a speedy rally sunshine. Thus it may be exacted that the day is not far distant in which there may be an approach to happier times by the modus operandi of applied industry. For this, many things are needed; but, to it, we look for the regeneration of our brethren in the East and in other regions of the world in which they are in a depressed and insecure condition. Among the means needful to bring about such a desideratum, we regard the fostering hand and guiding brain of European and American civilization as an important element. If the Jews residing in the industrial countries of the world would apply their energies to the obtaining of a better knowledge of the industrial capabilities of our brethren abroad, and of the countries in which they dwell, they would confer on themselves and their countries—lasting advantages. Until this idea be recognized and acted on, we must greatly rely on public and private benevolence to remedy the evils under which thousands of our brethren in foreign regions are afflicted. Still, on the whole, we have much to be grateful for. If the clouds still gather thickly over the East, the dawn is clearing away many a mist in the West and North. Brighter days are dawning for our people in Germany, Sweden, Italy and Spain.—J. C.

THE B'NAI BERTH OF THE PACIFIC IN AID OF THEIR BRETHREN IN CHICAGO.

A special meeting of the Order was called last night to devise ways and means to aid our unfortunate brethren in Chicago. At 8 o'clock p. m., the meeting was opened by Grand N. A. S. Solomon, who called the assembly to order, and explained the object of the meeting; he also stated that the sister Lodges of the "Pacific" had been notified and responded nobly. A motion was made and carried unanimously that $1,000 be given from the General Fund of the Grand Lodge. Dispatches were received from Baton Lodge, I. O. B. B., Sacramento, donating $200. Hope Lodge, Stockton, $200. Nevada Lodge, Virginia City, $500. Miriam Lodge, Marysville, $200.

A dispatch was also received from Mr. Kierski, Stockton, stating that he had collected $100 from co-religionists in his city, non-members of the Order.

Mr. Alex. Badt donated one-quarter of his yearly salary as Grand Sofer—$100—in aid of the sufferers.

The President of Ophir Lodge, No. 21, took chair and called his Lodge to order. A motion was made and unanimously carried, to donate $250.

Modin Lodge, No. 42, followed with a donation of $100.

Pacific Lodge, No. 48, donated unanimously $500.

Montefiore Lodge, No. 51, had no quorum present, but will, undoubtedly, donate liberally at their meeting, next Sunday.

The same was the case with Columbia Lodge, No. 127.

Golden Gate Lodge unanimously donated $100.

California Lodge, No. 12, donated unanimously, the same amount.

The money so far donated by the Lodges amounts to $3,350, and will, undoubtedly, be handsomely augmented by the donations of Montefiore and Columbia Lodges.

A motion was made and carried unanimously, that a committee of five be appointed by the Chair, to remit the money by telegraph to the Grand Nassi Av in Chicago. The Chair appointed Wm. Saalburg, Jacob Greenbaum and Louis Kaplan. The other two were the Grand Nassi Av and the Grand Sofer.

The President of the B'nei Berith Literary and Social Club gave notice, that the above Society will give an entertainment during next week, in aid of the suffering brethren in Chicago. The meeting then adjourned.

Mr. A. C. Niles, the Republican Nominee for Judge of Supreme Court, is a gentleman eminently fitted for that high position, being a very able lawyer and a strict, honest, incorruptible man. We hope he will get the support of all right minded citizens.

Ladies don't fail to go to the "Schneider" Matinee at the Metropolitan Theatre on Saturday afternoon next.

VACUUM
METHOD OF
TREATING DISEASES
WITHOUT DRUGS!
EQUALIZING
The Circulation of Blood
BY VACUUM
IS THE GREAT PRINCIPLE
AND THE TRUE ONE,
...AND IS...

Something New in Science & Medicine

The history of this method of treatment is a series of notable successes, as shown upon its records—a few of the testimonials of which are here produced.
The treatment goes directly to the parts or organs affected, and removes the difficulty or derangement. With female, THERE IS NO NECESSITY FOR EMBARRASSING EXAMINATIONS AND EXPOSURES, as the VACUUM CURE does the work with more than human intelligence. It searches out the weak point of the system, and by its unerring accuracy, denotes it. The stomach is not deranged or outraged by being dosed with drugs that MAY overcome a symptom that arises from a hidden cause. The seat of the trouble, in its sensitiveness, feels the treatment at once, and feels it only to yield to its beneficent influence. It is the MOST WONDERFUL discovery and curative science the world has ever known. The patient is not compelled to swallow daily potions of nauseating drugs. He has not first to be put "well under the influence of mercury." He is not debilitated, but from the first will gain new vigor, his appetite will return, sleep will visit him—nature's restorers—and he is soon in perfect health.

NO OPPORTUNITY FOR WRONG DIAGNOSIS.

It Finds the Seat of Disease at Once, and by Equalization of the Vital Forces Effects a Cure.

THE VACUUM
Cures all Nervous Diseases, Spinal and Kidney Affections, Strengthens the Corvetures of the Spine, etc., Cures Paralysis and Saint Vitus' Dance, all Form of Female Weakness, without examination, all Diseases of the Respiratory Organs, all Forms of Fever, Colds, and Congestion, all Lung Diseases.

The Sick are invited to satisfy themselves of the Efficacy of this Treatment, and the names and residences of those who have been cured, will be given with pleasure.

Great Chicago Fire.

Telegrams received this morning from our General Agents in New York, Messrs. Skeels, Bowers & Boughton, give our losses as approximating $350,000, in gold, subject to adjustment.

The Future Action
Of the Company may be judged from the following Resolutions passed at a meeting of the Board of Directors held this day:

Resolved, That the President be, and hereby is authorized and empowered to proceed WITHOUT DELAY to Chicago, and to ADJUST AND PAY THE LOSSES sustained by this Corporation, occasioned by the recent fires in said city, with power to draw for such purposes on the funds of this Corporation in New York.

Resolved, That the Fireman's Fund Insurance Company will continue its regular business, without interruption, notwithstanding its losses in Chicago.

CARD TO THE PUBLIC.

OFFICE PACIFIC INSURANCE COMPANY.
Oct. 10, 1871.—The recent conflagration at Chicago is a national calamity, unequalled in extent by any other known in the world. The losses are very heavy, and their extent no human foresight could have anticipated, nor possibly circumscribed. The losses to all Insurance Companies doing a general business are large; and while this Company suffers with all the others, we wish to assure the public and our policy-holders that our resources are sufficient to meet every liability and that all contracts and obligations will be properly and regularly adjusted and paid, and the Company will continue its business. While we are without positive information as to our exact losses, yet from the records at our office we ascertain that our risks on all the streets that penetrate the burnt district, extending to the extremes thereof, are $1,677,000 currency. Of course there must be deductions from this amount for the risks on the above streets beyond the reach of the fire. We are certain that the rumors now afloat respecting losses are greatly exaggerated, and that the losses when adjusted will not exceed ONE MILLION DOLLARS IN CURRENCY.

As soon as more exact information is received it will be promptly given to the public.

A small model of the machine was on exhibition at the Mechanics' Institute Fair, where the manner of working was fully shown. The carpets are cleaned by being beaten with a set of hickory sticks, about four feet long, which strike fairly, just as in beating by hand, being much easier on the carpet than the old machines with the rope-rope on a rotary, as that has a tendency to wear the carpet, by dragging, each time it strikes the carpet.

DR. SAGE'S
CATARRH
REMEDY

I do not wish to inform you, reader, that Dr. Wonderful, or any other man, has discovered a remedy that cures Consumption, when the lungs are half consumed, in short, will cure all diseases whether of mind, body or estate, make men live forever, and leave death to play for want of work, and is designed to make our sublimity sphere a blissful Paradise, to which Heaven itself shall be but a side show. You have heard enough of that kind of humbuggery. But when I tell you that Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy WILL POSITIVELY CURE the worst cases of Catarrh in the head, I only assert that which thousands can testify to. I will pay $500 Reward for a case that I cannot cure. A pamphlet giving symptoms and other information sent free to any address. This remedy is SOLD BY MOST DRUGGISTS IN ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

Price 50 cents. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of sixty cents, or four packages for two dollars. Beware of COUNTERFEITS and WORTHLESS IMITATIONS. See that my private Stamp, which is a positive guarantee of Genuine, is upon the outside wrapper. Remember that this private Stamp, issued by the United States Government expressly for stamping my medicines, has a portrait, name and address, and the words "U. S. Certificate of Genuine" engraved upon it, and need not be mistaken. Don't be swindled by travelers and others representing themselves as Dr. Sage; I am the only man now living that has the knowledge and right to manufacture the EXCLUSIVE Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, and I never travel to sell this medicine.

TRUST WHAT TIME HAS SANCTIONED.

The maxim that the voice of the people is the voice of the deity, may in some cases, be open to doubt, but the testimony of honest and enlightened witnesses extending through a series of years, and all to the same purport, is worthy of credence, admits of no question. Upon such testimony the reputation of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters as an antidote and cure for many ailments is based. During the twenty years that it has been before the world, innumerable preparations intended to compete with it, have gone up like rockets, and come down the extinguished effects. Meanwhile the progress of that incomparable tonic has been swift and steady—always upward and onward like the eagle's flight. Its introduction produced a revolution in therapeutics, and it proved to be one of those salutary revolutions that cannot go backwards. To-day Hostetter's Bitters is one of the most popular remedies in Christendom, and commands a larger sale than any other medicinal preparation, domestic or imported, on this side of the Atlantic. As a cure for dyspepsia, bilious disorders, nervous affections, general debility, and as a preventive of epidemic fevers, it takes precedence of every other remedy. This fact should teach the ambitious country dealers who endeavor to foist their local abortions on the public in its stead, how futile their small attempts to cajole the community must necessarily be. Where the game fish have failed there is no chance for the "suckers."

—Mr. Sweeney, merchant tailor, has removed to 43 Second street, where he will be glad to see all his old friends and customers.

7. Capitel.

Endlich fand Heiwisch seinen Schüler Re-villon, der lange mit dem Wagen auf ihn ge-wartet hatte, und Beide fuhren nach Nancy.
Dort bot sich (wenigstens für Revillon, dessen
Herz noch nicht durch politischen Fanatismus
verhärtet war) ein trauriges Bild ihren Augen.

Laufende, aus dem Innern Frankreichs
ausgewiesene Deutsche, deren Auswanderung
die französischen Behörden zu Anfang des Krieges verhindert, die man aber jetzt geplündert, von Allem entblößt, in ihr altes Vaterland hineinführt, dem sie längst ent-
fremdet waren, füllten dort den Stanielsplatz.
Weinend und hungrig standen Kinder um ihre Mütter, schmerzvoll starrten Männer, die, auch wenn sie Französinen
geheiratet hatten, man aus den Armen der Ihrigen gerissen, vor sich hin. Andere schienen den unersichtbaren Verlust ihres Vermö-
gens zu beklagen, das sie im Laufe eines
Menschenalters dort mühsam errungen.

Sie hatten durch deutsche Kriechlichkeit, Fleiß
und Verstreute sich im Ausland ein Feld der Thätigkeit, sich Respekt und Achtung bevor von den Franzosen herzuholen und auf
einmal war Alles durch Fanatismus zerstört
was ihnen theuer war! Seit der Vertreibung der Protestanten nach der Aufhebung
des Edikts von Nantes hatte die Welt nichts Ähnliches an Unmenslichkeit gesehen. Und bei dem verzweifeltsten Haß gegen Alles, was deutsch ist, den die Franzosen nach den glorireichen Siegen der Deutschen zeigten, war
kein Ende abzusehen, wann diese ihre in Frankreich betriebenen Geschäfte wieder auf-nehmen könnten! Deshalb war so tiefer Kummer den Mienen der Vertriebenen auf-gedrückt, während die Bewohner Nancys,
die zu den Fanatikern des Nationalhasses
zählten, kalt und höhnisch die Armen betrach-teten, keine Hand zur Linderung ihres Elen-
des sich zu rühren wagte.

Doch die Hilfe nahte. Nicht nur die
deutschen Behörden und Soldaten schafften
an Lebensmitteln an, sondern bei, was auf-zutreiben war, auch ein freiwilliges Sanitäts-
corps, Turner, nahm sich der Verlassenen
an, suchte für sie, sammelte Geld für sie und sorgten für ihre Unterkunft bis zur Weiterreise nach Deutschland.

Die Nanciger hatten diesen Anstrengun-
gen, „den deutschen Exponen“ (wie sie die Vertriebenen hießen) Hilfe zu bringen, mit unverkennbarer Willkür zugesagt und
hochfeste Bemerkungen darüber laut werden
lassen.

Die Turner hatten sich nicht darum be-kümmert, und als sie ihre Pflicht an ihren Landesleuten erfüllt, kehrte ein Theil von ihnen nach dem Stanielsplatz zurück und unterhielt sich vor dem dort befindlichen Kaf-feehaus.

Es war ein herrlicher Sommerabend und die Turner, ihren heimischen Sitten auch im Feindlande treu, genossen ihn bei einem frischen Trunk und einem Kede, ohne we-ches kein Trunk dem Deutschen mündet.

Natürlich sangen sie vor Allem die Nacht
am Rhein, was hinreichte, der Erbitterung
der Franzosen gegen die Deutschen, die sich
wie zu Hause bei ihnen geberdeten, den Boden auszufüllen.

Sie erwiderten die Nacht am Rhein
durch die Marfaisfäse. Von immer mehr angewachsenen Pöbelhaufen unterstützt,
drängten sie sich an der Spitze der Turner
heran. Man sah Stileite, Todtschläger und Stochdegen drohen.

Die Turner waren offenbar in einer gefährlichen Lage.
Da nahte zur rechten Zeit Hilfe. Eine starke Patrouille fernhafter Bayern kam über den Platz im militärischen Takte daher geschritten. Nach waren die Unruhestifter zerstreut und Einer der Widerstand versucht hatte, entwaffnet mitgeführt.
Die Turner aber sangen nur noch helleren
Klangs, daß es in der Hauptstadt Vostrin-
gens wiederhätte:

„Lieb Vaterland, magst ruhig sein“
Fest steht und treu die Nacht am Rhein“.

Unter den ausgewiesenen Deutschen hatte
Revillon auch einen Straßburger Photogra-
phen bemerkt, der lange Jahre sein Geschäft
dort ruhig betrieben und ein Französin geheiratet hatte, trotzdem aber seiner deut-schen Abkunft wegen, Revillon's Schick-
sal theilen mußte.

Da er aber eine Woche später, als Re-
villon, ausgewiesen wurde, war Heiwisch begierig, von ihm die neuesten Begebenheiten in und vor Straßburg zu vernehmen, und lud den Photographen ein, ein Nachtstuhl mit
ihm und Revillon zu verzeihen.

Da erfuhr er nun, daß die Cernierung
Straßburgs eine engere geworden, so daß jeder Verkehr nach außen unmöglich ist. Der bisherige Befehlshaber, der Belagerungsar-
mee, General Beyer, sei durch General Wer-
der ersetzt worden, wie man erzählte, weil er
nicht energisch genug vorgegangen. Man fürchte nun das Allerschlimmste: Bomba-
dement und Sturm, doch glaubten auch Vie-
le, daß es nicht dazu kommen würde; denn
wenn auch die Bader der Straßburger nicht
so heldenhaft und dem „Wanzenstich“ (wie sie Straßburg hießen) das sie so lang bedrögen, ginge einige Bombengröße senden
so wären doch die Preußen, welche

die Festung erobern wollten, sicher darauf
bedacht, die Stadt und das herrliche Münster
möglichst zu schonen.

Schonung von Preußen! Feuchte Feindschaft, welches im Krieg die Rücksichtslosigkeit selbst ist! Es kennt da keine Rücksicht gegen seine eigenen Landesväter, wird es Rücksicht gegen Feinde kennen? Doch ist
kein Entsatz zu hoffen?

Da! man hofft dort von allen Seiten,
besonders vom Süden her, Niemand kann
aber bestimmt sagen, wer ihn bringen wird.
Das große Frankreich.
Das ist seitdem klein geworden.

Heiwisch verließ seinen Koffer und fragte
nach dem Geiste, der in Straßburg herrsche.
Der panische Schrecken, die Muthlosigkeit
die den unentsetzten Niederlagen folgte, hat
nun einer resignirten Entschlossenheit Platz gemacht. Jeder fühlt, daß man die Stadt, die Festung, Frankreich erhalten muß und
kostet es auch die größten Opfer, Jeder ist
bereit sie zu bringen. Commandant und Maire, Bürger und Soldaten sind in dieser großen Sache einig und unterstützen sich ge-genseitig. Dem Feinde wird die Eroberung schwer gemacht werden.

Aber es soll an Genietruppen, ja sogar an Artilleristen, an Proviant und an gar Vie-lem fehlen. Man war natürlich auf so et-was nicht gefaßt.

Patriotismus und guter Wille ersetzen
Mangel. Wie gesagt, die Eroberung wird keine leichte sein. Man wird das Feuer energisch erwidern und an guten Artilleristen fehlt es nicht, gar mancher Bürger
hat, ehe er sich in Straßburg häuslich niedergelassen, die Kanone bedient, und kann
freiwillig dem Vaterlande sich widmen.
Man wird Ausfälle versuchen, alle Gräben
und die Umgebung sind unter Wasser gesetzt,
man wird sich nicht ergeben.

Heiwisch blühte Stolz bei diesem seinen
Landesleuten von einem Deutschen gezeigten Lobe.

Doch dieser zeigte nun auch die Rehrseite
der Medaille.
Kritisch sind die Preußen offenbar bessere
Truppen, von einer eisernen Disziplin, einer Anfälligkeit und Intelligenz, die den französischen Troupiers fehlt — es fragt sich nun
wer es am längsten aushält und ob der Patriotismus der Straßburger nicht wankt,
wenn die Stadt in Brand geschossen wird, Weiber und Kinder von den Bomben zerschmettert werden, was, mir die Preußen in Schiltigheim ergäßen, in wenigen Tagen geschehen soll.

Heiwisch bedachte sich das Gesicht bei diesem schauerhaften Bilde. Er besaß keine der Photographen und begab sich nach die-
sem Nacht mit Revillon auf seinem Wagen nach Schiltigheim. Er mußte in die Stadt zu seinen Lieben dringen, die Schrecken der Belagerung ihnen durch seine Gegenwart erträglich machen, so konnte er nicht länger leben er mußte seine Lieben oder eine Kugel
suchen.

Die Schrecken der Belagerung Straßburgs.
Wer nie die Schrecken des Krieges gekannt, der bete zum Himmel, daß sie seinem Vaterlande erspart werden; denn die Gräuel
des Entsetzes, der Ruin der Familien, die ein Krieg (ein Wort, das man so schnell in den Mund nimmt, das man so schnell in seinen Händen unternehmen) im Gefolge
hat, ist namenlos.

Nicht nur die Blüthe der Bevölkerung,
die freibaren Jünglinge, rafft er hinweg,
auch das hülflose Kind, angewiesen durch die Natur auf den Schutz der Eltern, die in Schönheit strahlende Jungfrau, die blühen-
de Mutter, mordet er oft lachend und schounungslos.

Straßburgs Bevölkerung hatte nie ge-
kannt, was eigentlich eine Belagerung ist.
Jahrbunderte lang hatte das Domes-schwert ruhig über ihrem Haupte geschwebt,
ist sollten die wohlhabenden reichen Bürger
lernen, welche Lust es ist Festungsbewohner zu sein.

Es kam die schreckliche Nacht des 23. August. Judith und Lea hatten sich eben auf
ihre Zimmer begeben, die Ruhe im Schlafe
zu finden, die sie des Tages über floß.
Die Mutter hatte schon früher sich zu Bette be-geben, sie war unwohl, die Sorge um die Zukunft, um den abwesenden Mann nagten
sichtbar an ihrer Gesundheit.

Da klickten die Fenster, die der Schwüle
wegen noch nicht geschlossen waren, war ein Donnerstag gefallen? nein es folgten drei
noch mehrere, viele in kurzen Zwischenräumen.

Die schändliche Rehe eilten die Mädchen
in's Gemach der Mutter, die eben beschäftigt
war, sich anzukleiden und fielen ihr weinend
um den Hals.

Also dieses gefürchtete Bombardement,
es ist jetzt da. Das unschuldige Blut, das
vergossen werden wird, komme auf das Haut des Urhebers dieses heillofen Krie-
ges! sprach ernst, wie eine Prophetin, die Mutter.

Als wollte sie Amen dazu sagen, sprang
eine Granate an's Nachbathaus, freipreie,
und zerstückte mit furchtbarem Krachen
ein zum Glück unbewohntes Dachzimmer
und alle darin befindlichen, kostbaren, Geräthschaften.

Mädchen und Mutter starben eine Weile
zitternd und stumm, selbst die sonst so mu-thige Judith war sprachlos.
Sorge für die Ihrigen gab der Mutter
zuerst die Besinnung wieder.

Kindes, es ist Zeit, an unsere Rettung zu
denken, schon des Vaters wegen, eilen wir in den Keller.

Die Mädchen und die Magd, die eben-
falls, zitternd und bebend, herbeigeeilt war,
schafften Betten, Kissen und sonstige nöthige Gegenstände in den Keller. Die Mutter
konnte nicht mit Hand anlegen, sie war zu erschöpft.

Ehe die Familie sich in den Keller begab,
erklärte sie den Widerstand in Straßburg Brandes und vernahm das Rauschen der Feuerkugeln, das Rufen der Pompiers, die
sich der Gefahr zum Trotz an den Ort des Schreckens begaben.

Segene Gott die muthigen Männer, sie
werden uns davor bewahren, daß die Stadt
in Flammen aufgeht, sprach Judith, denn
es mühte etwas Schreckliches sein, da drun-
ten im Keller lebendig und Schutt begraben
zu sein, den das Feuer als Grabstein
aufthürmt.

Wer beschreibe die Schrecken dieser ersten Nacht! Wenn auch vor den Bomben sicher, waren doch die vier schüchtern weiblichen
Besen beim Schall der furchtbaren Geschosse
in steter Angst.

Ach! sie sollten sich bald an diese Musik
gewöhnen, das Heulen und Klagen der Bomben und Granaten sollte etwas Alltägliches werden.

Gegen Morgen ließ das Bombardement
nach, die Familie begab sich wieder in ihre Wohnung, die unverletzt geblieben war und hielt Kriegerath.

Sollte man das Haus verlassen? aber wo-hin sich begeben? Verwandte hatte Judith Familie nicht in Straßburg, jedoch viele Freunde. Aber was sind Freunde in der Stunde der Gefahr, wenn Jeder für sich zu
sorgen hat, und was man denn in einem
anderen Hause sicherer vor den furchtbaren Geschossen?

Zum Waire konnte sie gar nicht gelangen.
Das Rathhaus, das selbst Kugeln erhalten
hatte, und in dessen Nähe die schönsten Häuser
der Stadt zerstört waren, war so über-füllt von Behörden, rapportirenden und hülfsuchenden Bürgern, der Waire selbst
so beschäftigt mit Anstalten zum Schutze der Stadt und zum Unterhalte der armen Volks-
klassen, daß Judith wohl einsah, hier kein Rath für sie zu holen. Ein Adjunkt empfing Judith mit vieler Höflichkeit und rief
sie mit möglichst vielen Lebensmitteln zu ver-sehen, da die Belagerung voraussichtlich
lange währen würde.

Das war ein schimmernder Trost! eine lang-
wierige Belagerung bei einer solchen Ver-sorgung!

Nun ging es an den Ankauf der nöthigsten Lebensbedürfnisse, was gegenwärtig auch nicht mehr so leicht war, da Jedermann sich perproviantirte und deshalb manche Artikel
theuer und selten, andere nicht mehr zu fin-
den waren.

Wit einer Detonationsfrau ihres Glaubens
legte sie fest, daß täglich die nöthigste Milch
wenigstens für die Mutter bereit gehalten
würde. Zur Lieferung in's Haus verstand sie die Frau jedoch nicht.

Mit Chocolate, Thee, Wein, Brod u. f. w.
bedacht, kam Judith mit dem Dienstmädchen
endlich nach Hause.

Sie war mit Ungebuld erwartet worden.
Die Mutter fragte nach dem Schicksal der Stadt.

Judith gab beruhigende Antworten; sie
verschwieg die Schrecken, deren Augenzeuge
sie gewesen.

Leider hatte das Dienstmädchen diesen Geist nicht. Es plauderte, ja übertrieb es, und so wurden die Mutter und Lea besorgt, ja trostlos und alle Versuche Judiths,
ihnen Muth einzufloßen, scheiterten.

Die Gefahr nahm zu. Das Bombardement
wurde von Nacht zu Nacht heftiger und selbst den Tag über fortgesetzt.

Die schönsten Gebäude und Sammlungen
der Stadt wurden in Asche gelegt, der rothe Wiederlehen der Flammen erschoß nicht mehr,
die Vorstädte waren ein Trümmerhaufen die Zahl der Verwundeten und Todten schon eine sehr beträchtliche.

Auch in's Haus des Feiwisch Lion hatten
vier riesige Granaten ihren Weg gefunden, sie hatten einen Theil des Mauerwerks eingerissen, über die Hälfte des Hausgeräthes
zerstört und die Treppe so mit Schutt ver-barrt, daß der Zutritt zu den oberen Räumen unmöglich war. Die Familie war auch für die Stunden, wo das Bombardement
schwiege, auf den Keller beschränkt.

Welcher Zustand für eine nicht mehr junge
Frau und für zarte Mädchen, die ein behag-liches Leben gewöhnt waren.

Zu tochen war nicht im Keller, der Rauch
hätte die Einwohner getödtet, ohnedies war
die Luft dort eine höchst ungesund! Man würde sich mit Brod und eingemachten Früch-
ten, die man noch im Hause hatte und vorzüglich von Caffee und Thee.

Aber dazu war Milch nöthig und wenn
auch zum Glück die Detonationsfrau den Contract hielt, obgleich für Milch jetzt die höch-sten Preise bezahlt wurden, so mußte man sie
doch jeden Tag holen und das Dienstmädchen
war um keinen Preis mehr zu einem Gang
über die Straße zu bewegen, seitdem eine Granate ganz in ihrer Nähe trepp und vor
ihren Augen einen jungen Pommer förmlich
in Fegen gerissen hatte.

Der Anblick war so gräßlich gewesen, daß
sie Tag und Nacht ihn nicht aus dem Gedächtniß verlor.

Also mußten die Mädchen selbst Milch für die Mutter holen. Aufangs hatten sie das abgewehrt, Lea wollte durchaus nicht, daß Judith allein sich der Gefahr aussetze und begab sich muthig auf den Weg. Zurückge-kehrt fiel sie trotz des Versuchs, muthig und gelassen zu erscheinen, in eine Ohnmacht, so sehr hatte der Anblick der Ruinen, des Feuers
und besonders der Todten und Verwun-deten ihre zarte Natur angegriffen. Ein hitziges Fieber war die Folge.

Judith dagegen war nach und nach ganz
unempfindlich gegen das Heulen der Bomben, und das Einschlagen der Granaten geworden.

Ruhig, als ob sich das Bombardement
von selbst verstände, ging sie mit dem Milch-topfe über die Straße und beschleunigte
ihre Schritte nicht im Geringsten, wenn auch eine Mefenbombe prasselnd die Ziegeln

eines zerstörten Daches ihr zu Füßen
warf.

Und auf diesem Wege schützte sie stets der Himmel. Das Bewußtsein: Du mußt deine
schwache Mutter, deine kranke Schwester rei-
ten, hielt sie aufrecht bei allen Schrecken, die
auf sie einwirkten.

Leider konnte alle diese Aufopferung, konnte
die zärtliche Pflege ihren Lieben die Gesundheit nicht wiedergeben. Die Schreffen, die Entbehrungen, die abgeseulde Kellerluft zerstörten von Tag zu Tag mehr die Kräfte der Mutter und die Gesundheit der zarten Schwester.

Nun kam ein Ereigniß, welches den Be-der des Unglücks zum Ueberfließen bringen
sollte!

Die Belagerten hatten den ausgebeht-testen Gebrauch vom Wasser der Zil gemacht. Alle Gräben, alle Wege waren mit überfließendem, stehendem Wasser angefüllt,
welches dem Vordringen der Belagerer große Hindernisse in den Weg legte.

Ein muthiger Genieoffizier der Preußen
wachte in einer finsternen Nacht einen jener
Dämme zu durchstechen, andererseits das
Wasser der Zil so zu stauen, daß es die Keller der Stadt überschwemmte.

Die Keller Straßburgs, der letzte Zufluchtsort der unglücklichen Bewohner, wurden mit flutendem, kaltem Wasser angefüllt.

Die Wirkung dieser Ueberschwemmung
auf den Zustand der fieberkranken Lea war der unglücklichste. Die muthige Judith be-dete durch die Fluth, einen Arzt zu holen,
der trotz der um sie fliegenden Geschosse dem Mädchen seine Hilfe nicht verweigerte. Er
kam mit den nöthigen Medicamenten watete
durch das Wasser, um zu finden, daß die arme
Lea verloren sei.

Die Arme lag im Delirium. Ihre eben-
falls kranke Mutter lehnte sich, auf eine Kiste
stehend, die zur Hälfte vom Wasser bespült
war, über das Bett, der Sterbenden etwas Thee ohne Milch, einsüßend, den sie auf ihrem Bette eben mit der Spiritusmaschine
bereitet hatte.

Dem Arzte, der schon manches Elend ge-sehen, kamen Thränen in die Augen bei diesem Anblick.

Er konnte nicht lange weilen, seine Hilfe
war jetzt so vielfach in Anspruch genommen.
Er gab seine Medicamente ab, tröstete die
Mutter mit wenigen Worten und empfahl
sich.

Zu Judith aber, die ihn durch das Wasser
bis an's Thor geleitete, sprach er:
Mademoiselle, ich bewundere Ihren
Muth, ihre Entschlossenheit. Erhalten sie sich Ihrer Mutter, Ihre Schwester wird Ihres Weistands in wenigen Tagen nicht mehr bedürfen. Der Typhus ist in einem
so heftigen Stadium bei ihr, daß unter den
ungünstigsten Verhältnissen, in denen die
Kranke sich befindet, der Tod gewiß ist.
Ich sage das Ihnen, weil ich Ihren Muth
bewundere. Tragen Sie auch diesen Schlag muthig.

Das vermochte Judith nicht. Die künfti-
gig hinausgeschraubte Stimmung machte
einer förmlichen Verzweiflung Raum. Sie
setzte sich auf eine Stufe der Treppe, die vom Wasser nicht erreicht war und machte ihrem
gepeinigten Herzen durch anhaltendes Weinen Luft.

Ach! wie viel Unglück hat der Krieg im
Folge, das man gar nicht kennt.

Nach einiger Zeit kehrte sie gefaßt in den
Keller zurück, beschwor die Mutter, sich zur
Ruhe zu begeben und übernahm die Pflege
der kranken Schwester.

Wie machte sie über ihre Athemzüge!
Sollte dies wohl der letzte sein? über die unruhigen Bewegungen, die Angststöße der in Fieberphantasie Verlorenen? Und sie konnte ihre nicht helfen. Die einzige Schwester, auch noch ihre wahrste Freundin, sie sollte sterben
und sie allein lassen.

Allein? lebte ja noch die Mutter.
Und der Vater! aber wo?

Jetzt überfiel Judith eine wahre Angst,
es duldete sie nicht mehr im engen Keller, es
trieb sie auf die Straßen, zu sehen, ob nicht Hilfe, Rettung aus diesem furchtbaren, anfassen Ketzer zu schaffen sei.

Wie sah es auf den Straßen aus? Ge-trach der mörderischen Geschosse und der ein-flutenden Häuser, Jammergeschrei und Hülferufen.

Da kam aus einem brennenden, verlassenen
Hause eine Bande sogenannter Vagabunden (Vagabunden) heraus, allerlei mit sich schlep-pend, Betten, Spiegel, Hausgeräthe, sie hat-
ten, was sie tragen konnten, aus dem Hause
geraubt und sich wahrscheinlich auch im Keller
berauscht; denn während der brennenden Ballen niederfluteten und einen der Ihrigen
mit seinem Raube begruben, sangen sie
schlaftrübe Lieder und Einer von ihnen,
schwankenden Schrittes, ging auf die er-schrockene Judith zu und wollte sie umfassen.

Judith stieß den Wüßling mit Abscheu
von sich und schloß sich in ihr Haus.

Einige der Bande, ihren Raub auf die
Straße stellend, machten Anstalten ihr zu
folgen.

Entsetzlich! alle Schrecken, die sie um-gaben, der schändlich drohende Tod machten
diese verwilderten Menschen nur noch bestia-lischer.

Die Bande war Judith in den Keller gefolgt, wo eben die arme Lea in den Armen
ihrer Mutter den letzten Seufzer ausgestossen hatte.

Ein noch im Tode schönes Bild, wenn auch bleich und abgezehrt, lag das sanfte Mädchen
ruhig da.

Die Mutter erstarrte fast unter Schluchzen
und Wehklagen.

Judith warf sich auf die Leiche der gelieb-
ten Schwester, mit Küssen ihre kalten Lippen
bedeckend.

Da umfielen sie die verwilderten Men-
schen, denen nicht einmal die Verzweiflung
und der Tod Ehrfurcht einflößten.

Judith aber ergriß ein Weib. Entris-
tung, heiliger Zorn färbten ihre Wangen
mit brennender Röthe. So mag die jüdische Heldin ausgesehen haben, deren Name
sie trug.

Der Verwegenste der Bande, aus dessen
Umrüstung sie sich frei gemacht, ging auf's
Neue auf sie los, da ließ sie das scharfe
Beil fallen, es hinterließ eine klaffende Wunde in der Stirn des Freilers, der tau-melte und auf den Boden des mit Wasser angefüllten Kellers fiel. Die feigen Gesellen
des Todten flohen.

Universal Self-pressing Cigar Mould,
(Patented November 1870, and January 1871.)
The most perfect, practical, simple and economical Cigar Mould in existence

Advantages of the Universal Self-pressing Cigar Mould.

They are cheaper because only 100 are required for each Cigar-maker!
The Bunch dries much quicker as each mould is exposed to the air.
The head of the Bunch is completely formed, the edges so hard and sharp that turning is superfluous.
The strength of the Spring is calculated therefore cannot press the Bunch too tight.
The Spring is the press and protects the Top from breakage and prevents dust or dirt from gaining access to the interior of the Mould.
The Outlets for Presses alone are as much as the entire cost of our Moulds.
The work is done quicker, there being no time lost in Pressing.
As no Press is used no Bond to the Government is necessary.
